Director's Statement

I'd like to thank my entire cast, as they've put up with some real new approaches, at least with this production, of putting on a play. It took several weeks just to get the play cast, and even then, when we took all of the holiday week off from rehearsals, they still are drawn to their parts, and love this play.

In ancient Greece, where drama was first put into play form and staged, it wasn't usual for there to be any scenery, and in a lot of cases, even any props, as the actors usually stood in a semi-circle and recited their lines. It was up to the audience to imagine the scenery and sometimes even the action. Therefore, I have decided that any scenery would be superfluous for this play, as it's fast running, and takes place on different parts of the stage. With the lights delineating the borders of the action, there's no need to muddle the stage up with scenery. I want to invite you all to our experiment and use your imagination to follow the action on stage and the imaginary scenery. I couldn't have built anything to take the place of your imagination.
